Synopsis

José and Kumbia work as shepherds at Leandro's ranch. They're sick of his bad treatment and their own helplessness. So they come up with a plan to change their future: steal the herd and sell it at the Mexican-American border. But Leandro's son Jeronimo is always at their heels, and will do anything to get them. He knows that the loss of a single sheep will cost a shepherd his job. Their plan come under greatest threat when José's first love, María, comes back between Jeronimo and José...

About the director

Humberto Hinojosa Ozcariz (México, D.F., 1981) began working in television commercials as an actor and assistant director. He studied communication sciences at Iberoamericana University where, among others, he made the successful short 16mm film "The Old Man" ("El viejo"), which won the 7th International Festival of Film Schools in Kinoki, Mexico. Other short films: "Second Slap" ("Segundo cachete"), "Happy End" and "El orbil". After working with various directors and producers, he decided to establish Tigre Pictures his own production company with Pablo García. Black Sheep is his feature film debut. He is currently writing his second film "AI LOV IU" and making commercials.
